STREAM TV PREPARES TO INTRODUCE GROUNDBREAKING 7-INCH MOBILE TABLET WITH ANDROID OS

iPad competitor available for pre-order starting August 24th

AUGUST 12, 2010 (PHILADELPHIA, PA) Stream TV Networks is preparing to launch a new mobile tablet that optimizes portability, connectivity and computing power like never before in one sleek device. With a high resolution seven-inch screen and streamlined dimensions of 8.2 inches by 4.8 inches, the new eLocity A7 tablet is more portable than the iPad and sports a striking design expected to appeal to a wide demographic of users. Stream TV will be working with leading national online retailers to offer the A7 tablet for pre-order starting August 24th, when the product will be officially unveiled.

Running the Android operating system, the eLocity A7 offers access to a wide range of mobile apps and a higher degree of compatibility with common office software than products running competing operating systems. The eLocity A7 also stands to take video viewing and gaming on a tablet device to a whole new level, integrating high-end display and graphics technology. The eLocity A7's detailed technical specifications will be made public at the time of official launch on August 24th, 2010.

CEO Mathu Rajan of Stream TV comments, "We look forward to the launch of the eLocity A7 tablet, which provides a cutting edge solution to meet the needs of technology enthusiasts with a beautiful, versatile and affordable device. We believe we have created a worthy competitor to the iPad."

The introduction of the eLocity A7 tablet is the first step in Stream TV's strategic growth plan to bring to market innovative products featuring state of the art technology designed to transform consumer communications and a digital lifestyle.
